

Περίληψη :

Some legends date missionary activity in the northern coast of the Black Sea back to the apostolic era, while some hagiographical sources trace it to the period of Diocletian and Constantine I. In the 6th century, these missions were connected with the empire's political activity, while during the Iconoclasm missionary activity passed into the hands of the exiled Iconophiles. The missionary activity of Constantine (Cyril) concerned also the Pontic region. Part of the Tatars of Crimea was converted in the Palaeologan era.

1. The state of research

Byzantine missionary activity, both from a theoretical point of view and in terms of the actual practices, is the main subject of the recently published work of S. A. Ivanov.¹ As far as research in the wider Black Sea region is concerned, Byzantine missions usually fall under the general category of the history of Christianity and its expansion in the area.

2. Apostolic tradition

According to tradition, missionary activity in the Black Sea coasts dates back to the apostolic era. The Byzantine conviction that the Apostle Andrew founded the Patriarchate of Constantinople emerged in the late 8th century; however, scholarly research has established a link between this belief and the legends concerning Andrew's missionary activity. The monk Epiphanius, from the monastery of Kallistratos at Constantinople, wrote the Vita of the Apostle Andrew between 815 and 843.² He recorded there the Apostle's itinerary, according to a tradition that was being established already in the 4th c. Among others, the Vita offers an account of Andrew's activity in Skythia, in the land of the "Kosogdians," that is the habitants of the city of Sougdaia (mod. Sudak in Crimea), in Colchis, in the land of the "Ethiopeans" (the inhabitants of Inner Colchis) and the "Gorziniens" (Georgeans?), as well as in the "great Sebastopolis" (today's Sukhum in Abkhazia), in the garrisons of Apsaros (mod. Gonio in Azaria), and near the river Phasis, where Iberians, "Soussor", "Foustoi" and Alans were settled.³ According to the tradition, Andrew was buried in Patras, Greece, but his remains were transported to Constantinople and placed as relics in the church of the Holy Apostles, built by Constantine I. The Acts of Andrew (Acta Andreeae), dated in the 7th century, have survived in several languages and describe Andrew's missionary activity in the Crimea and the eastern coast of the Black Sea.⁴

The diverse itinerary that Andrew followed can be traced around three large areas: Skythia (Crimea and its environs to the north), Colchis and the coastal area of Asia Minor, including the city of Byzantium and its surroundings. The Latin sources that discuss Andrew's activity in Skythia are the eldest: the testimony of Arnobius (between the 3rd and 4th centuries), Tertullianus (first half of the 3rd century) and Origenes (d. 253). Eusebius of Caesarea borrowed a phrase from Origenes, according to which Skythia was destined for Andrew.⁵

During the first centuries of Christianity in Crimea there is no apparent evidence for a particular worshipping of Andrew (as was the case in Constantinople). On the contrary, in the eastern coast of the Black Sea existed a deeply rooted tradition that linked Andrew to the Christianisation of the area; this is verified by the Russian ambassadors to the Mingrelians,⁶ as well as a missionary monk of the Vatican, Cristoforo Castelli in the 17th century. Castelli writes that the great church of Pitsunda was dedicated to the Apostle Andrew, also considered an Evangelist in the area.⁷

3. The Early Byzantine period

The ‘Passion of the Saints of Cherson’, dating in the 4th century, contains information on the early history of Christianity in the Crimean peninsula.⁸ In 299, at the time of Hermon, bishop of Jerusalem, a mission was sent to Crimea. One of the two bishops taking part, Basil (Basileus), was sent to preach in the city of Chersonesos, while the other one, Ephraim, was to spread the Christian faith among the barbarians (“Tauroskythes”) on the outskirts; both became Martyrs. Later on, another group of missionaries arrived in Chersonesos, comprised of three bishops (Eugenios, Agathodoros and Elpidios), but their mission also failed. Finally, at the time of Constantine I and after the martyrdom of Aetherios, the bishop Capiton managed to baptize the inhabitants of Cherson. The comparison of this data with historical and archaeological evidence has caused long disputes.⁹ Certain modifications to the text of Martyrios reveal the intent, during the reign of Theodosius I, to emphasize the decisive role of the Constantinopolitan Seat. The bishop of Cherson, Aetherios, a historical figure, participated in the Council of Constantinople in 381.

Concerning Cimmerian Bosporus, we find objects of Christian worship in tombs, dating to the 3rd and 4th centuries. The bishop Kadmos participated in the Council of Nicaea in 325. In the second half of the 4th century and in the 5th century, there is more archaeological evidence for the Christianisation of the area, including tombs, decorated with Christian symbols. In the eastern part of Crimea, the large Jewish communities created a friendly environment that made possible the propagation of Christianity. Near the medieval church in Bosporus (Kerch) came to light the remains of a baptistery, dated in the 6th century.¹⁰

In the eastern coast of the Black Sea another group of seven martyrs appears in the sources. These were seven brothers, soldiers and martyrs, who were exiled in Pityous during the time of Diocletian and Maximian (286-310). The Life of St Orentios, a 6th century source, describes the route from Trebizond to Pityous, in the form of a journey. Six of the brothers died in the coastal towns along the way, while only Longinos managed to reach Pityous.¹¹ Another party of Christian soldiers, the saints Eugenios, Valerian, Kanidios and Akylas, was also exiled in Pityous; they were later burned to death in Trebizond and became martyrs. The most famous exile in Pityous during that period was St John Chrysostom, sent there in 406. However, he never made it to Pityous and died in the area Komana in Pontos in September of 407.¹²

John Chrysostom played an important role in the Christianisation of the Goths residing in Constantinople. Theodorets of Cyr (5th century) compares Chrysostom to the Apostles. According to tradition, John had great missionary activity in the areas of the Abasgoi, the Alans, the Iberians (Georgians) and other peoples. This activity is evident in the Life of John, written in the 7th century, but does not correspond to actual events.¹³

In the 6th century, historians, such as Procopius of Caesarea, Malalas and others, mention the activities of Byzantine missionaries in the area of the Black Sea. According to Agathias, Justin I baptised in Constantinople the ruler (prince) of Lazoi Tstathius (“spiritual child” of the emperor) in 522.¹⁴ This ceremonial baptism of “barbarian” princes by the Byzantine emperors in the Baptistry of Hagia Sophia will later become a tradition of imperial diplomatic practices. In the period of Justinian this Byzantine mission became a mission endorsed by State. A typical example can be found in the Christianization of the Abkhazians (Abasgoi). Procopius writes that these people living in the Caucasus were still, in his days, worshipping trees as gods, as is indeed verified by modern Abkhazian place names. Therefore, several place names include the word “anykha” (an area or sacred item) and a word that is the name of a tree, for example “akhash-nykha” (the sacred area of the pear tree). At the beginning of the 5th decade of the 6th century, Justinian sent to Abkhazia the palace eunuch Euphratas, a person of Abkhazian decent, accompanied by priests. Euphratas managed to persuade the Abkhazian princes to denounce the practice of castration. During the same era the church of the Virgin Mary was built.¹⁵ This church is identified as the Tsandripsh basilica, near the town Gagra (ancient Nitike).¹⁶ In 527 Justinian baptised in Constantinople Grod (or Gord), ruler of the Huns, who lived near the Cimmerian Bosporus. In the 5th decade of the 6th century, the Goths Tetraxites, who resided in the valley of the river Ypanes or Kuban, requested a bishop from Justinian, who happily granted them their request.¹⁷

Therefore, the Christianisation of the “barbarians” by the missionaries sent from the empire’s capital was integrated with the political and diplomatic context of the wars of Justinian.

4. The Iconoclastic Period

The Iconoclastic period was a significant period for the propagation of Christianity, due to the fact that the iconoclasts were forced to leave the capital and other important cities. The martyr Stephen the Young, around 754, addresses the exiled iconoclastic monks and advises them to flee to the Black Sea area, near the province of Zichia, Cherson, Bosporus, Nikopse and Gothia.¹⁸

St Stephen of Sougdaia had significant missionary activity in Crimea. According to his Life, which survives in Greek, Slavic and Armenian versions, he must have been sent to Sougdaia by Patriarch German of Constantinople (715-730) around 729. As a bishop there, he managed to convert to Christianity many pagans (Antigue, Chazars and others), who formed a significant part of the population. For 35 years, for the duration of his bishopric, he also ordained many priests and deacons.¹⁹ After his death on 764, his two pupils continued on teaching Christianity, one in Chazaria and one in Sougdaia.

At the beginning of the 9th century, the iconophile John Psychaites was exiled to Crimea. There he persuaded many pagans, living in the environs of the Bosporus, to convert to Christianity.²⁰ From the Life of John of Gothia, written between 815 and 843, we understand the complex reality of life in Crimea: in the mid-8th century, Gothia had regular iconoclastic bishops, while at the same time John was a 'heretic' iconophile bishop.²¹

The Taktikon (Notitia) of the Patriarchate of Constantinople, also called the 'Taktikon De Boor' or 'the Iconophile Taktikon' (Cod. Par. 1555A, № 3 according to J. Darrouzès), dates to the end of the 8th century- beginning of 9th century. It mentions the province of Gothia, which includes the metropolitan see of Doros, and seven bishoprics. Among them were also the town Tamarcha and the fortress Astel, centre of the Chazar Hun. This metropolitan seat controlled a very large area: Crimea, part of northern Caucasus and part of the north-eastern coast of the Black Sea.²² In this Taktikon we can detect the Patriarchate's intentions to extend its control on the areas surrounding the Black Sea.

5. The Middle Byzantine and Palaiologan periods

Cherson of the Taurus area was a significant place for the missionary activity of Constantine-Cyril, one of the two brothers from Thessalonike, known as the Apostles of the Slavs (ca. 860).²³ Cyril visited "the peoples of Phoulloii", a town north-east of Crimea²⁴ and persuaded its citizens to cut down the holy tree that they worshipped until then. During Cyril's stay in Cherson, in the winter of 860/861, the relics of St Clemens were discovered in the island called 'Kazatchij' (of the Kazaks). The description of the itinerary of this mission is very rich in details concerning the topography of the town and the position of certain significant sanctuaries,²⁵ as well as the liturgical typikon.²⁶

In 988, in Cherson, the Russian prince Vladimir and his army ("druzhina") were baptized by the bishop of the town. Scholars have not yet identified the church where this ceremony took place. They have suggested the larger basilica of Ouvarov ("Ouvarovskaya"), the cross-shaped church in the main cemetery or even the cross-shaped church situated in the market-place.²⁷ The relics of St Clement and his pupil, along with ceremonial instruments, crosses and icons from Cherson were the gifts of Vladimir to the Cathedral of Kiev, the oldest church in Russia, also called 'Desiatinnaia'.²⁸ To commemorate his conversion to Christianity in Cherson, Vladimir built a church there (probably the so called 'basilica on the hill' in the western part of the city).²⁹

At the beginning of the 10th century, the empire was busy with political problems in the area near the north-eastern coast of the Black Sea, inhabited by the Abkhazians, the Alans and the Khazars. Abkhazia was the "field of missions" for the conversion of the Alans of the northern Caucasus. Patriarch Nicholas Mystikos sent letters to Constantine III, ruler of Abkhazia (letter 51, dated in 914-916), to his son, George II (letter 46, dated 916-917) and to the bishop of Cherson (letter 106, dated 920), in which he mentions the conversion to Christianity of the Alans, their ruler, and another people that is not named.³⁰ The Christianization of the Alans was not smooth. A letter of Theodore, Bishop of Alania, addressed to Patriarch German of Nicaea in 1225, narrates the many difficulties that the propagation of Christianity had met in that area.³¹

The Palaiologan era was the final period of Byzantine missionary activity in Crimea. Toward the end of the 13th century, written sources mention the conversion to Christianity of the Tatars. In the 14th-15th c., a bishop of tataric ancestry is recorded in Sougdaia.³²

1. Adm.: A major source for the organization and development of Byzantine administration. In the Middle Byzantine period the taktika, as presedance lists (τακτικά πρωτοκαθεδρίας or τακτικά της καθέδρας or κλητορολόγια or κλητοροθέσια) catalogued the officials who participated to the formal ceremonies of the imperial palace. Four precedence list are still preserved: Uspenskij, Philotheos', Benescevic, de l' Escorial.

2. Mil.: A "Taktika" is a famous manual for strategic and tactical military operations by land and by sea. Author in the early 10th century. at Leo F. The text preserved in a compendium and complete the form and influenced the drafting of such handbooks as downstream strategic.

3. Eccl.: The "taktiko", known also as "Notitia episcopatum" or syntagmation, in the administration of the Church is a classification list of ecclesiastical authorities according to hierarchy.

Foundation document of a monastery compiling the rules regarding its administrative organization and liturgic rituals, as well as the comportment inside a cenobitic monastery.

The monastic typika could also include the biography (vita) of the monastery founder along with a catalogue of the movable or immovable property of the monastery. They constitute an important source for the study of the monastic life, while at the same time they shed light on many aspects of the Byzantine society.

The liturgical typika were calendars with instructions for each day's services, liturgical books with rules arranging the celebration rituals.

Παραθέματα

An excerpt from the Vita of St. Stephen of Sougdaia

2. κατὰ δὲ τὸν καιρὸν ἐκεῖνον τῆς περιωνύμου πόλεως Σουγδαίας πρόεδρος τὸν βίον ἀπολιπόντος καὶ πρὸς κύριον ἐκδημήσας, χρεία καὶ ζήτησις ἐγένετο ἔτέρου ἀρχιερέως· εύρων δὲ ἡ ἐκκλησιαστικὴ τάξις τὸν ἀοιδιμὸν ἄνδρα καὶ διὰ τὴν προσοῦσαν αὐτοῦ ἀρετὴν καὶ τὸ εὐσταθὲς τοῦ ἥθους καὶ τοῦ λόγου βρίθοντα καὶ ὁρθῶν δογμάτων ὑφηγητήν, ψήφῳ καὶ δοκομασίᾳ τῆς θείας καὶ ιερᾶς συνόδου καὶ αὐτοῦ τὸν ἀποστολικὸν θρόνον ιθύνοντος (Γερμανοῦ, λέγω, τοῦ ἀγιωτάτου καὶ ὁμολογητοῦ) εἰς τὸν ἀρχιερατικὸν θρόνον ἀνάγεται ὁ πανιερώτατος Στέφανος. καὶ τίθεται τὸ φῶς ἐπὶ τὴν λυχνίαν καὶ φέγγει πᾶσιν τοῖς ἐκεῖσε μὴ μόνον πιστοῖς, ἀλλὰ καὶ ἀπίστοις, οὐ μόνον τοῖς ἐγγύς, ἀλλὰ καὶ τοῖς πόρρω δίκην ἡλίου πάντας καταφωτίζει καὶ καταγλάζει τῷ φαεινῷ αὐτοῦ βίῳ.

The patriarch Nicolas I Mystikos praises Constantine III of Abasgia of his role in the christianization of the Alans:

Τῷ περιδόξῳ ἐξουσιαστῇ Ἀβασγίας

Τὸ φιλόθεόν σου καὶ τὸ χρηστὸν τοῦ τρόπου ἐκίνησεν ἡμᾶς πρὸς τὴν ἀγάπην, ὡς τοῦ θεοῦ ἀνθρωπε· καὶ ἴδού πρῶτοι διὰ τοῦ γράμματος προσαγορεύομεν σε καὶ ὡς τέκνον ἡμῶν οἴτα παρόντες ἐναγκαλιζόμεθα καὶ πατρικοῖς φιλήμασι περιπτυσσόμεθα. Καὶ γὰρ τοῦ μὲν φιλοθέου ἀπόδειξις ἡ ἐνθεός σου σπουδή, ἥν ἐπὶ τῇ σωτηρίᾳ καὶ τῇ ἐπιγνώσει τῆς ἀληθείας τοῦ ἔθνους τῶν Αλανῶν ἐπεδείξω καὶ ἐπιδείκνυσαι· ἀνεμάθομεν γὰρ ἐκ διαφόρων τῶν ἐπισταμένων τὰ σὰ κατορθώματα ὡς μετά γε θεὸν πολλὴν τὴν πρόνοιαν κατεβάλου εἰς τὸν φωτισμὸν τοῦ τῆς Αλανίας ἀρχοντος καὶ εἰς τοὺς ὅσιοι σὺν αὐτῷ κατηξιώθησαν τοῦ ἀγίου βαπτίσματος.
